Our community has always been blessed with groups and volunteers working to care for neighbors facing acute emergencies and other critical needs. But as our community grows and needs shift, are we still dealing with our most pressing current issues — and could we do things even better? COMPASSION '11, this year's community roundtable, focuses the spotlight on education and how we can enhance opportunity for our students. You'll be part of the solution, not merely a spectator, and this effort continues after the gathering, with work groups preparing to put your ideas into action.

COMPASSION '11
The road to prosperity begins at the schoolhouse.

in the morning

EDUCATION PANEL

After an introduction by Dr. Matt Garrett, former president of Central Carolina Community College, a panel of top education, business and civic leaders will discuss local education and what might be done to enhance opportunity for our students. As they're confirmed, members of the panel will be announced at FACEBOOK.COM/UWLEE.

in the afternoon

EDUCATION ROUNDTABLE

Everyone participating in COMPASSION'11 gets a say during a working lunch, when groups will discuss and suggest ways to enhance educational opportunity in four specific areas: increasing parental involvement, promoting safer schools, supporting effective teaching and helping students develop a life plan.

COMMUNITY QUICK TAKES

While our focus is on education, there are short, 20-minute presentations throughout the day on findings from a community health report by the Lee County Health Department and a new nonprofit management certification being introduced by Central Carolina Community College and the United Way.
